*This whale is not confirmed since it could not be relocated and determination of it being a re-sighted carcass was inconclusive.

 This whale was originally included as a serious injury case due to an entanglement that was first documented in October 2020 off Massachusetts, USA.

This whale was originally included as a serious injury case due to an entanglement that was first documented in August 2022 in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Canada.

*This whale was originally included as a serious injury case due to a vessel strike that was first documented in January 2024 off South Carolina, USA.

This is a presumed/probable right whale based upon photos collected in May 2024. The carcass was not examined, and no samples were collected for genetic testing.

Note: Tables represent confirmed mortalities and injuries reported in each country and do not always reflect the location of the injury or death of the animal. Carcasses may drift across national boundaries; therefore, a carcass may be sighted or reported in one country even though the mortality occurred elsewhere. Species or stocks that migrate across national boundaries often carry their illnesses, injuries, or exposures to toxins with them. For mortality, serious injury, and morbidity determinations in these species, transboundary collaboration is critical in determining the causes of injury, illness, and mortality for each animal.

* "Dependent Calf – Serious Injury to Mother". Unless additional information proves a dependent calf survives the loss or serious injury of its mother, a confirmed case involving a dependent calf of a dead or seriously injured mother is counted as a serious injury to the calf based upon the injury to the mother (in this case entanglement).
